The Prize Awarded!

Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co.
Wins the Prize at the World's Fair with their
"EAGLE" Brand Beer.

St. Louis, Oct. 28, 1903.
Messrs. MacFarlane & Co., Ltd.,
Honolulu, H. I.

Dear Sirs:—We have mailed you a copy of the Globe-Democrat announcing the great victory won by the Anheuser-Busch Association with their "EAGLE" Brand of Beer.

(Signed) ANHEUSER-BUSCH BREWING ASSOCIATION.

(Special Dispatch to Globe-Democrat.)

World's Fair, Chicago, Ill., Oct. 26.—No award has ever been made so gratifying to St. Louis people and so justly merited as the one given today by the Columbian jury of the World's Fair, consisting of connoisseurs and chemists of the highest rank, to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association. By methods of unrivaled business enterprise and by using the best material produced in America and Europe, excluding corn and other adulterants or surrogates, the different kinds of the Anheuser-Busch beer have become the favorites with the American people, and have now conquered the highest award in every particular, which had to be considered by the Columbian jury. The high character of the award given to-day by the jurors will be better understood when it is known that the different beers exhibited by the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association had to compete with hundreds of the most excellent displays of other brewers. The fact that no other concern has received so many points for the various essential qualities of good beer confirms anew the firm's reputation as the leader of all American beers, and Mr. Adolphus Busch can feel proud over this result so justly merited.

The above is a fac-simile of the label of the "EAGLE" Brand which took the Prize.

In ordering this Beer be sure to ask for the "EAGLE" Brand.

way to get anything as large as the worm to it, except by the opening between the ground and the floor at one end of the porch. The only way to get to that was to go down off the porch by two steps and follow a narrow plank walk along one side of it for ten feet to the open end. I hadn't the slightest idea that the ants would attempt such a journey with the ponderous worm, but I found again that I didn't know ants. "In two or three minutes the excitement among the disappointed ants quieted down, and they got together for business again. After a consultation they must have come to the conclusion that it was too fatiguing a task to move the worm in the way that they had moved it to the crack, and they adopted new and most surprising tactics. I saw first one ant, then another, and then a score or more of ants force their way under the carcass, until it began to rise from the floor and was at last entirely clear of it, resting on the backs of the ants that had one by one wedged themselves beneath it. Then the carcass began to move, carried on the backs of two parallel rows of ants. The rest of the army marched along as an escort, and as I found out, as a relief corps for the detachment bearing the burden. "The steps that led from the porch to the plank walk were within a foot of the spot where the carcass of the worm had been found by the skirmishing ant, and so they had to come back all that distance to carry out their new plan. The burden was borne along in a steady march, and so rapidly it was in a very short time brought to the edge of the porch at the steps, where it was put down. The ants came out from beneath it, and the carcass was quickly tumbled over the edge to the first step, carried to the edge of that, and tumbled to the second, and then to the walk. There a detachment of the army took up the lead in the way it had been done before, and the march proceeded along the walk toward the open end of the porch. Half way down the walk the burden carriers put it down and another detachment relieved them and the march was resumed.

"The caravan had proceeded but a short distance further, though, when a panic seemed to strike the group of ants that formed the advance guard. They began running excitedly to and fro, and the panic spread to the entire force. The army halted, and the burden ants came running out from beneath the body of the worm, and it rolled over on the walk. I soon discovered that this excitement had been caused by the appearance of a big black ant, which had come skirmishing up the walk and come face to face with the caravan of red ants. The black ants are the deadly and dreaded foes of the red ants, and the sudden appearance of this one had caused all the alarm. If the red ants had been as good soldiers as they were engineers they would have avoided the disaster that overtook them, for they would have at once made the solitary black ant a prisoner, and the dire result that followed his movements would not have been.

"Upon seeing the advance guard of the red ants the black ant turned and dashed back down the walk. He followed it a couple of yards, and then disappeared at one side of it. The panic that this ant had thrown the red ones in lasted so long that they had not recovered from it for some time after the black ant disappeared. They then resumed their march as before, and I could see that it was a more rapid one, and that there was much uneasiness in the army. And there was need to be, for before the ants had reached the end of the porch where they were to turn off to go under it, up the walk, on the double quick, came a horde of black ants, an army as large as the forces of the red ants, if not larger. The latter were quickly surrounded by the blacks, and in less than a minute fell victims to their foes. I don't think one of them escaped. The more powerful black ants seemed to have no difficulty in dragging the carcass of the worm away, and in a very short time they had disappeared with their plunder from their nest down the walk, every member of their army that was not required in handling the worm carrying the body of a red ant home with him."

Bear Hunter in Pennsylvania
[Young Sportsman, Albion, N. Y.]
T. W. Cain of Bradford has but one arm, but he handled his gun so well with that lone arm the other day that it is not likely that his claim to the championship as a bear-killer will be disputed by any two-armed hunter in Pennsylvania or elsewhere. He went into the woods near this place, one barrel of his gun loaded for birds and the other for bear. Among some down timber he routed out a last spring's cub. He promptly shot and killed it. He had scarcely put another buckshot cartridge in the empty barrel before an old bear, presumably the mother of the dead cub, came tearing out of the top of a fallen tree, followed by two more cubs. Cain scrambled up on a pile of tree trunks. The old bear started after him. He gave her a load of buckshot and she tumbled back among the logs, where she lay kicking and howling. He loaded up and lodged another charge and she quit kicking and yelling for good and all. Then he picked off the remaining cubs and had the satisfaction of seeing the entire family of bears stretched dead around him. It took but five minutes to bag the four. Cain jocosely says that it is a good thing for the bears in those woods that he didn't have two arms, for then he might have got eight bears instead of four. JAMES.
